

PINEAPPLE BATH DAILY TO MAKE HER WHITE

Lenore Ulrich in Her Costume in Famous Play

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 2.—A pineapple juice bath is the latest beauty medium to be adopted as a stage accessory.

Miss Lenore Ulrich, who plays "Launa" in Tully's Hawaiian romance, "The Bird of Paradise," is responsible for the innovation.

To acquire that golden tint with which Hawaii's clime has dusked her handsome daughters, Miss Ulrich is compelled at every performance to coat her body with brown grease paint. The most difficult part of her career has been to get the stuff off again and to appear in her own white complexion.

It was a source of exceeding worry to Miss Ulrich until she met an old Hawaiian woman who prescribed a bath of pineapple and other juices.

"And it works like a charm," says the leading lady in the "Bird of Paradise."

It's rather hard on the advance man, however. For it's up to him to see that all theaters in which the